The Jasinski Canoe Launch, is a one-acre parcel on the Dixon West Place Ditch, located five miles west of North Liberty. The channelized waterway is the northeastern terminus of the Kankakee River National Water Trail, established in 2016. From this launch point paddlers can access roughly 133 miles of river and ditches. The trail is maintained by the Northwest Indiana Paddling Association.

According to the Indiana Department of Natural Resources, the Kankakee River was channelized in this area in the early 1900s to drain portions of the massive Kankakee Marsh. The river’s headwaters are located a half-mile west of the launch. The Marsh was once a rich wetland teeming with wildlife and was a popular hunting destination. Today, the surrounding land is agricultural.

The launch is unpaved and is suitable for canoes, kayaks, and small boats. There is a gravel access drive and small parking area. No structures or amenities are present on the site. The launch area is jointly managed by the St. Joseph County Parks and the Department of Public Works.
